The Australian Commercial Marine Group (ACMG) develops and promotes Australia's international competitiveness in the commercial marine sector. It is the peak body for the Australian commercial marine industry and is governed by a committee and the AIMEX board of directors.

If you are an Australian company involved in providing shipbuilding and repair facilities and services or associated marine products to the Commercial and Defence Shipbuilding industries then ACMG is the organisation that can provide support and information to you.

ACMG is a group of Australian companies uniting to ensure the Commercial and Defence Marine sectors continue to grow and remain competitive.

Members will receive special rates and promotion at ACMG supported national and international exhibitions & boat shows, promotion on the ACMG website, links to national and international networks, a strong voice and representation to all tiers of government and first-hand information on industry programs and issues affecting the sector.

Members receive newsletters and meet regularly for informative and educational networking events.

ACMG is supported by the Federal, State and Local Governments.

If you are in the Commercial Marine or Marine Defence sectors, you will find membership of ACMG to be a great investment.

Who are our members?

Members of ACMG are drawn from Australia's shipbuilding and ship repair facilities, services and manufacturers of associated marine equipment for both commercial and defence vessels.

Commercial vessels are generally those used in connection with any business, trade, commerce, government or research activity.

Defence vessels are generally considered a warship or other vessel that is operated for naval or military purposes by the Australian Defence Force or the armed forces of a foreign country.
